COURSE OVERVIEW

The first-level degree course in Administration and Organisation Sciences emphasises the integration of a number of subjects, especially law, economics and business economics, politics and sociology, converging for the acquisition of the specialised and broad-ranging skills necessary for the study of the code of conduct in both the public administration and state and private agencies.

CAREER PROSPECTS

Prospective occupations include all those professions that require knowledge about the management and control in the organization of businesses and public administration; of work organization and staff management; of financial and accounting management of state and private agencies; of provision and sale of goods and services; of communication and internal and external representation of a company's image.

The course is designed to enable students to work in the area of management and coordination of civil servants to set up specific public policies for the development and promotion of the territory, and to assist in the design and implementation of initiatives for economic and social development.

SYLLABUS

Core units cover four subject areas: social and political sciences, law, business studies and economics.

Graduates will be expected to master a multi-faceted, deep knowledge of cultural, scientific and professional methodologies, as well as a solid political, institutional, legal, economic, and organisational preparation to be applied to the field of public administration (nationally and internationally) and to private complex organisations. The contents and methods of training are highly interdisciplinary and focus on subjects from the areas of political science, sociology, social psychology, law and institutional history, as well as on economic and business subjects, which are fundamental to fully understand the organizational and managing dimension of public and private companies.

At the beginning of year III, students may opt for one of the two curricula available: 1) Labour Consultancy; 2) Politics and Administration. The labour market constantly demands for competent staff in the field of personnel management and organization of work. To meet this demand, we have decided to combine the traditional path for the training of personnel for the public administration with an additional curriculum of higher specialization in the labour field. Therefore, we have diversified the two curricula.
